

Inter-alliance Blended Intensive Programme
Title of the BIP	Borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation
General information
Objectives and description	The “Borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation” BIP focuses on the practices of producing, controlling and resisting categories. Categories are always the outcome of a process of classification, that is the action of tracing a line. This process is crucial as we understand the world and the reality that surrounds us through categories, by distinguishing one thing from another. These very categories which help us make sense of and structure reality, also constrain our very borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation existence. That is to say, our existence is framed by the fact of being defined as “something”: a woman, a worker, an Italian person. Nonetheless, these definitions are never exhaustive of our individuality and agency: we are never only a woman, a worker, or an Italian person. Sometimes we embrace these categories, sometimes we resist or negotiate them. Against this backdrop, this BIP proposes to look at categories and understand them in terms of practice, that is, the process of categorisation defined as the act of bordering, creating a boundary. The BIP explores three main dimensions of borders and categories: i) various dimensions and scales of borders and boundaries, from micro to macro: international and institutional borders, social and individual boundaries; ii) the specificity and commonalities of different processes of categorization, such as gender and sexuality, race and ethnicity, social class, etc.; iii) the epistemological and theoretical frames available to think about borders and categories. The “Borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation” BIP, entirely taught in English, has an interdisciplinary approach. Its classes will discuss borders, boundaries and categories from multiple angles, including socio-cultural, linguistic, historical and political factors. In line with the mission of the UNITA hub Inclusive Societies, the BIP seeks to reflect on the role of borders and categories to go beyond pre-established social realities.
Methods and outcomes	The “Borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation” BIP is very appealing for students from several areas in Social Sciences and Humanities, including Political Science, Sociology, Anthropology, Law, Modern Languages, Geopolitics, International Relations, Geography, Human Geography, Area Studies, and History, but will be of interest to other areas as well, as its themes may also suit the interests, academic profile and background of non-specialists. Given its international and interdisciplinary nature, the “Borders & Boundaries: Practices of Categorisation” BIP aims to foster intercultural and inter-linguistic understanding, comprehension and dialogue between students from different universities and nationalities on a set of issues that concern the lives of all communities at both (inter)national and socio-cultural levels.
